

I do not believe that there should be any limits on the services that satellite radio can offer. Just as the small dish companies now offer the local TV stations as a premium, satellite radio should be able to offer localized programming, even original local programming.

I switched to satellite radio because the local broadcasters choose to ignore the aging baby boomer demographic and concentrate on the under 30 audiences.

If they don't want my advertising dollars, then I should be allowed to choose a program service that does. And that service should be allowed to give me any entertainment or news service that I wish to pay for.

Let the market place decide, not the lobbyists from the broadcast industries.
